NUMB. 3235

SATURDAY, JULY 14, 1744.

To the AUTHOR of the DAILY GAZETTEER.

SIR,

I Am extremely pleased with the Respect that has been paid to the Memory of Mr. Pope, by printing in your Paper the Poems written on his Decease in Ireland; and particularly the beautiful Latin Ode which appeared a few Days ago. It is certain we never had a Poet more justly, or more universally admired; and therefore every generous Man must feel an extraordinary Satisfaction in seeing all Parts of British Dominions vie with each other in his Praises. Amongst all that have been published, that Latin Ode pleases me best, and therefore I send you a Translation of it; not that I have Vanity enough to think I can, in any Degree, approach the Original, but purely to prevent its being totally lost to the mere English Reader.

I am,

SIR,

Your constant Reader,
and very humble Servant,

J. N.

P. S. Shall I beg the Favour of you to reprint the Original.

To BRITAIN,

On the Death of Mr. POPE.

An ODE.

DEjected Isle, what Grief creates,
This Stroke of the relentless Fates,
That hence thy Poet tore;
Apollo, and the Muses Joy,
What can so great a Loss supply,
What future Age restore?
Who now shall sing thy spreading Shades,
Thy beauteous Hills, thy flow'ry Meads,
Thy Spring, thy Summer Pride;
Or who rehearse in equal Lays,
While the sweet Stream Meandring plays,
Thy Thames all-pleasing Tide?
Who now, should MARS propitious smile,
And FRANCE, quite vanquish'd by your Isle,
In all her Projects fail;
Or who, if thou shouldst Spain subdue,
In Verse alike and Virtue true,
Record the glorious Tale?
From Pindus' Top the Muses fly,
Tho' Phœbus with his Lyre was by,
To hear his sweeter Strains;
Phœbus himself confess'd his Power,
And leaving the Castalian Bower,
Mingles with British Swains.
While Pope bids Windsor's Forests rise,
Still with his various Subjects vies,
Now lofty, loud and shrill;
And now like Zephyr's Ev'ning Breeze,
That gently fans the bending Trees,
Serenely sweet and still.
Not he whom stubborn Stones obey'd,
Than Thee with sweetest Musick play'd,
Or shall in Fame excel;
Nor e'en the Thracian Bard, whose Lyre
Could with soft Flames of Pity fire
The Tyrant Lord of Hell.
As the great Thund'rer's Bird aspires
To reach his Lord's Æthereal Fires,
Where pointed Lightnings glow;
Tours thro' the ever-yielding Skies,
Disdaining, as aloft he flies,
The Earth's dull Soil below:
So Pope his steady Flight pursues
Far, far above our aking Views,
To Realms of endless Day,
Superior to the Starry Spheres,
Where Musick, like his own, he hears,
While tuneful Seraphs play.
On Caster's Bank the Swan expires,
While Musick his last Breath inspires,
Less tuneful still than thine,
To Death thou couldst thy Note prolong,
Thy last was still the sweetest Song.
And still the most divine.
The Muses their lost Poet mourn,
The Graces weep about his Urn,
And Phœbus drops a Tear,
With Roses strew the sacred Ground,
With Laurel let his Brows be bound,
And Marble Altars rear.

ODE in ALEXANDRUM POPE.

A MICHAELE CULLIN.

Apostrophe ad Angliam.

Heu! tibi dirae rapuere parcae
Gloriam Phoebi decus et Sororum,
Quae tibi gignent similem futura
Saecula vatem?
Quis tibi posthac fidibus canoris
Saltuum grates celebrabit umbras?
Qua movet lenes Tamesis recurvo
Flumine Lymphas.
Gallicis quisnam spoliis onustos
Martiâ natos referet Camenâ?
Quis Britannorum domitos triumphis
Dicet Iberes?
Liquerant Castae gemini Sorores
Voce pellectae juga celsa Pindi,
Et tuis lactus Citharae Repertor
Mansit in oris.
Quamdiu Popi nemus omne cantus
Audiit blandos, ecleres morari
Fluminum lapsus, validosque duros
Ducere Quercus.
Non tuo vati, celebris canendo
Certet Amphion, neque qui tremendum
Flexit Inferni modulus Tyrannum
Thracius Orpheus.
Qualis ad summas volueris Tonantis
Tollitur nubes rapido volatu
Sordidis semper propiora terris
Nubila spernens.
Talis ad sedes rapitur supernas
Arduus vates, celerique pennâ
Dividit Coelum rutilamque sese
Condit in Aethram.
Dulcius nunquam gelidas Caystri
Cygnus ad ripas cecinit, supremum
Spiritum ducens, properansque vitae
Tangere Metam.
Naeniis Phoebi Chorus omnis urnam
Ornat, ad sacram Charites favillam
Anxiae lugent queriturque raptum
Moestus Apollo.
Tu super vatis tumulum recentes
Spargito flores, viridique lauro
Cingito Crines, memorique serva
Marmore Famam.

IRELAND.

Dublin, July 7. We are assured, that 4000 Protestants have already taken the Oaths of Allegiance to his Majesty, since the Commissioners of Array, have sat at the Tholsel for that Purpose; and that many of them design to appear in the uniform Dress of the Regiments they belong to, next Thursday, when the Militia of this City will appear in St. Stephen's Green, and make a finer Appearance than ever was seen, in this, or any other Nation, at their own Expence. It is computed, that the Protestant Inhabitants of Dublin alone, have already laid out more than 40,000 l. in Cloaths, Arms, Horses and Furniture; which shews such a Spirit of Loyalty and Affection to his Majesty's Person and Government, as cannot be exceeded in any Part of the World. The Citizens, who march that Day, will have Orange colour'd Cockades in their Hats, in Honour of the Victory obtained over the Army of the late K. James at Aghrim in 1691; which was the last Battle fought in this Kingdom, and which restored us to our religious and civil Liberties, that have been confirmed to us ever since, by a Succession of glorious Princes.

Mullingar, July 4. At the Assizes here, one Patrick Gordon hath been found guilty, and received Sentence to be hang'd and quarter'd, for the Murder of Mrs. Hannah Pilkington, an ancient Gentlewoman in this Country. Some of the Circumstances were, that as the Deceased was in a Field, near her House, driving a Colt or Mare which was straying from her, he attacked her, and attempted to ravish her; but on a resolute Resistance made by her, he took out of her Pocket a Handkerchief, wherewith he strangled her, and after she was dead, it is thought, he committed another most horrible shocking Fact. He is to be gibbited near the Place where he committed the Murder.

Loughlin Dowling, and John Murphy, were tried for a Robbery on the High Way, but the Jury cannot agree; they have been lock'd up in the Jury Room all last Night and this Day, and are to remain there all this Night, and be carried To-morrow in Kishes to the Bounds of the County.

On Tuesday died Mr. Pettigrew, an eminent Quaker, aged about 92.

And the same Night, Capt. Richard Ashburne, who was very well in Health, and accompanied the Funeral, died suddenly, about Twelve o'Clock.

On Thursday last the Dublin Society met at the Parliament House, to adjudge the Premiums of Ten Pounds each, for the best dy'd Pieces of Black and Scarlet Cloths. There were 21 Pieces of Black Cloth produced, when several eminent Woollen Drapers, who were so kind as to attend on the Occasion, unanimously gave their Opinion, and Reasons, to the Society, that they adjudged the Premium of 10 l. to Mr. John Daly, of Crooked-Staff; which was immediately paid to him by the said Society.

Nineteen Pieces of Scarlet Cloths were also laid before the Society; who proceeding in the same regular Manner, the other Premium of 10 l. was adjudged, and paid for the Cloth manufactur'd by Mr. Thomas Dun, and dy'd by Mr. James Ennis, of Pimlicoe.

Last Tuesday Morning died of the Small Pox, Richard Blake, Esq; of Ardsty in the County of Galway, possessed of an Estate of 5000 l. a Year; a young Gentleman of an universal good Character.

Several French Ships, which were detained here on the breaking out of the War with France, were Yesterday discharg'd by Order of the Government.
